Radio Station, Hamhung

1. [redacted] a North Korean radio station and signal unit were west of Hamhung in a cave at approximately 127-32, 39-54 (CV-739192). The entrance to the cave which contained the radio equipment was camouflaged with tree branches and other green foliage, but the radio antenna, which protruded from the top of the cave, was not camouflaged.
2. The station maintained radio contact with the front lines. The radio station was commanded by a lieutenant, and approximately 40 North Korean troops were assigned to it. Fifteen other North Korean troops at the radio station composed a mobile repair unit which repaired radios and signal systems in the area. One light machine gun was set in the cave entrance. The radio station was guarded 24 hours a day, and unauthorized persons were prohibited from entering the area.

Radar Installation, Haeju Area

3. [redacted] a radar installation,<sup>1</sup> which was built by Soviet Air Force personnel was on a hill 80 meters east of Okkye-dong (125-42, 38-03) (YC-3714), near Haeju. The radar installation was equipped with two radio sets. Unauthorized persons were prohibited from entering the area of the radar installation. An air raid watch was maintained near the installation, which had telephone communication with nearby anti-aircraft guns.

4. [redacted] a Chinese Communist radar installation<sup>1</sup> was at Okkye-dong, Haeju, on a slight slope under three locally well known 100 year-old pine trees, 500 meters north of the Haeju public stadium and 600 meters west of the Haeju reservoir. Thirty Chinese Communist and ten North Korean troops were at the radar installation. One heavy machine gun was set in the entrance to the shelter containing the radar equipment.

Anti-Aircraft, Haeju Area

50X1-HUM

5. [redacted] there were five anti-aircraft guns<sup>2</sup> half concealed in shelters on the slope at Okkye-dong, Haeju, 500 meters north of Haeju Public Stadium, guarding the Chinese Communist radar installation which was also in this slope. Telephone communications were maintained between the anti-aircraft gun shelters and the radar shelter.

6. [redacted] 500 men of a North Korean anti-aircraft unit<sup>2</sup> were at Okkye-dong (125-42, 38-03) (YC-3714) to protect the radar installation there. The unit was equipped with three Stalin-type anti-aircraft guns, three anti-aircraft machine guns, and 4 x 7.62-mm. Maxim heavy machine guns, one radio set to communicate with P'yongyang, and two telephone sets to communicate with the radar installation.

7. [redacted] 150 men of a Chinese Communist anti-aircraft unit were deployed in trenches on a hill 500 meters from the former Japanese Buddhist Temple in Kune-ri, Haeju (125-42, 38-02) (YC-3713). The unit, which moved from P'yongyang [redacted] was charged with defending the radar station at Okkye-dong and other military installations in the Haeju area.
